VOL. 1.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1905.

PREFACE.

This work has been compiled in compliance with the provisions of a joint resolution approved March 3, 1897, which directs the preparation "of an index to all publications of the Government from 1881, the date at which the Descriptive Catalogue of Government Publications by Ben: Perley Poore terminates, to 1893, the date at which the index by the Superintendent of Documents begins, said index to conform in its general plan to the Comprehensive Index of Government Publications from 1889 to 1893," published in 1894. The publications indexed are therefore those issued during the period covered by the Forty-seventh to the Fifty-second Congresses, inclusive, printed either by order of Congress or by the several Executive Departments of the Government.

It was thought that the work could be completed within five or six years, but it proved to be of unexpected magnitude and to involve an amount of labor far in excess of what had been anticipated. It is at length issued in the confident hope that it will be found to be an acceptable contribution to the bibliographical literature of the Government—an efficient and therefore a welcome aid to all who have occasion often to consult public documents.

The considerations which determined and seemed fully to justify the form and scope of the work are set forth in the preface to the Comprehensive Index issued in 1894, as follows:

"To anyone familiar with the publications of the Government it must be evident that a satisfactory index of the same must be sui generis, differing, in certain important respects, from that of any other series of publications. This is rendered necessary, in the first place, by the peculiar and complicated classification of public documents, and, in the second place, by the multiplicity of editions of many of these documents, issued in distinct series and under different titles. Such an index must not only contain a reference to every document published, but it must clearly indicate where the document is to be found in the several series under which Government publications are classified, and if issued in more than one edition or series then a reference to each edition or series must be given.

"Many documents, for instance, are published as Executive or Miscellaneous documents of the Senate or House of Representatives; again, in a different style of binding and with a different title, as reports or publications of an Executive Department, and again, with still another title, as reports of a particular bureau or office of the department. To subserve the largest convenience, therefore, an index must take cognizance of each of these editions.

"The question of making the work an authors' as well as a subject index has received careful consideration. Of course the one essential element in such an index is the subject, to which the author must be held entirely subordinate. To incorporate an authors' index with the subject index would materially increase the bulk of the work, with no corresponding advantage. At the same time it is regarded as important that the author of every document, or the source from which it emanates, should be indicated.

"As all public documents are printed at the Government Printing Office at Washington, no reference is made to their place of publication; and as they are all publications of the United States, very few of them are indexed under the title 'United States.' In an index of miscellaneous books these references might be necessary or important, but not in an index devoted exclusively to public documents.

"The above considerations have determined the special form or arrangement given to the index. The left-hand column shows the origin of documents indexed; the Executive Department or office from which they come, if Executive documents; the committees of the Senate or House presenting them, if reports, and the individual member of the committee making the report; and the authors of most of the miscellaneous documents and papers referred to. For convenience of reference, an alphabetical index to these authors and persons for the entire work is appended at the end of each volume.

"The right-hand column shows their classification as Congressional documents—i. e., as Executive documents, Miscellaneous documents, and Reports of Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives—indicating the Congress and session to which they appertain, the volume of the series in which each is embraced or which it forms, the serial number of the document, and the number of pages it contains.

"The middle or principal column is the index itself, showing as concisely as practicable the subject of each and every document accessible published during the period covered by the index, together with its date, and in the case of documents issued in two or more editions, the series, other than the Congressional, in which they are found; and in the case of Senate and House Reports, the serial numbers of the bills upon which such reports are based. This last will enable anyone who wishes readily to trace the discussions in Congress of the questions involved in these reports by reference to the Congressional Record, and is regarded as an important feature of the index. Whenever these bills were enacted into laws, and in many cases when the recommendations of Executive officers were embodied in acts of Congress, a reference to these acts, as found in the Statutes at Large, is also given in this column.

"In case a document is issued in a form separate and distinct from the volume of Congressional documents in which it is incorporated, or from the general work of which it forms a part, this fact is shown by the abbreviation 'Sep.' in this column.

"The dates given are, with a few exceptions, those at which the documents were submitted for printing, not those of their publication, the former being regarded as much more important, while in a great majority of cases the latter could only approximately be given.

"With few exceptions, two lines are devoted to each entry, and in these the complete story of each document is given as fully as the purpose of the index requires.

"This purpose has been to cite not merely every numbered document published by the Government as embraced in the Congressional classification, many of which constitute entire volumes, but also every important paper embraced in these volumes. Each of these volumes is indexed under its proper title, while each of the important reports contained in the volume is also indexed under its special subject. So far as they were available, all the publications of the Executive Departments of the Government not included in the numbered series of Congressional documents issued during the period covered by the index are also noted in the work.

"In a word, the aim has been to make the volume what its title implies—a Comprehensive Index to the Publications of the Government—so that anyone in search of information on any subject can readily ascertain whether this information is found in any of these publications, and if so, where; to supersede all partial indexes, or indexes of special series of documents, by combining all such indexes in a single work, and adding to these a reference also to every other public document, so that a single index shall fully and satisfactorily accomplish what the many hitherto issued have only partially done."

The compiler is indebted to the heads of the several Executive Departments, bureaus, and offices of the Government for the many courtesies shown him in the preparation of the index, in supplying copies of their publications or requisite information regarding them. It has, of course, been impossible for them to furnish every document issued during the twelve years covered by the index, so that it is probable that in the aggregate quite a large number of publications, chiefly, however, of an ephemeral character, are not noted in the work.

The compiler is also under very great obligations to the several clerks of his office for valuable assistance rendered in the compilation of the index, and especially to Mrs. Virginia T. Bennett and Miss Sallie L. Ball, without whose efficient cooperation its publication must have been much longer delayed.

Congressional documents.

[The publications enumerated in this list are those ordered printed by either or both Houses of Congress primarily for their own use and for distribution to libraries. They are bound in full sheep, and constitute the "Congressional set" of public documents. Many of them are issued in departmental and bureau editions, bound in cloth. The serial numbers attached to the several volumes are those devised by the compiler of this index to facilitate reference to them, which numbers have been adopted by the Government Printing Office for the convenience of all concerned.]
